Journal of European Psychology Students (JEPS)

The European Federation of Psychology Students Associations (EFPSA) is pleased to announce that the Journal of European Psychology Students (JEPS) has now started to accept original research articles, literature reviews and book reviews from psychology students all around Europe, for publication.

EFPSA represents approximately 250 000 European Psychology students through its member organisations. JEPS, as a service of the Research Network (R-Net) of EFPSA, aims to publish high quality student works and give them a voice that will be heard across Europe. We aim to give psychology students a chance to gain experience in publishing an article and to improve their scientific writing skills. JEPS not only provides a unique opportunity for European psychology students but also serves as a high-quality academic platform for the exchange of bright and challenging ideas. The scientific committee of the journal consists of highly reputable scholars from different parts of Europe. The editorial board consists of EFPSA R-Net members and an international team of psychology students.

JEPS is a peer-reviewed journal that will be published online, twice a year. We will publish original research articles and book reviews. Submission guidelines and information regarding the format and structure of the papers can be found at <http://jeps.efpsa.org>. After being evaluated by PhD students, your papers will be sent to professors in the relevant field and subsequently they will be accepted, rejected or sent back for further revision.

The deadline for submitting articles for the first issue is 15.09.2008

The manuscripts should be sent electronically to journal@efpsa.org. The manuscript should be written according to APA rules.

Please feel free to contact us at journal@efpsa.org with any inquiries.
